MARSHALL REILY WEDDING SOLEMNIZED

Miss Jo Reily, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Reily of Hondo, became the bride of Tommy Marshall of Comanche, Texas, at 7:15 p. m.
Thursday, June 5th. Mr. Marshall is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M.
Marshall of Comanche. The wedding was held in the garden at the home of the bride's parents, with Rev. R.
F. Davis, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Hondo, officiating.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a coral pink point d'esprit gown fashioned with a long full skirt and a wide collar extending winglike from the bodice to form brief sleeves. Her only ornament was an antique pin belonging to her mother. She carried a colonial bou-quet of white rosebuds and blue del-phinium, showered with white satin ribbons and white carnation petals.

Miss Kathleen Moore of Sabinal was maid of honor and wore a gown of blue and white striped novelty crepe made with long full skirt, square neckline and tiny puffed sleeves. Her round bouquet was of pink carnations.

Ted Durham of Comanche assisted the bridegroom as best man.

The rites were read in the garden
in front of the home before the door which had a white trellis entwined with pink and lavender petunias and greenery. Natural shrubbery at each side of the door formed the background. During the ceremony the guests were seated under the ocean trees on the lawn which was bordered with pink Dorothy Perkins roses and pink verbenas. Miss Ivy Jean McCall, pianist, gave the wedding music and accompanied Mrs.
Earl W. Howard Jr. of Pearsall, who sang "Until". The muted strains of "Love's Old Sweet Song" were heard as the marriage vows were made at the twilight hour.

The reception which followed the wedding ceremony was held on the east lawn. The bride's table was laid with a lace cloth and centered with a crystal bowl of Shasta daisies tinted in pastel colors, with white candles burning in crystal hurricane lamps at each side. The rectangular cake, iced in white and adorned with spun-sugar pink and blue petunias, was placed at one end of the table.
Pineapple ice was served from a crystal bowl. Mrs. Benny Oefinger, sister of the bride, of Odem, presided at the cake and Miss Sybil Rudasill of Rocksprings served the ice.

Miss Ivy Jean McCall registered
the guests in the bride's book.

The bride's mother wore a blue crepe dress and a corsage of pink rosebuds. Mrs. J. M. Marshall, mother of the bridegroom, was attired in navy blue sheer and her flowers were white gladioli. Mrs.
Howard wore white mouseline de soie with tinted daisies in her hair.
Miss McCall's frock was pink dotted Swiss and tinted daisies formed her shoulder corsage. Mrs. Oefinger wore blue chiffon and peach colored gladioli were her flowers. Miss Rudasill wore red and white eyelet pique and a corsage of gardenias.

Pink petunias and verbenas, and pot plants decorated the west entrance of the home, and the living room and dining room, where the wedding gifts were displayed, were decorated with floor baskets of pink and lavender petunias.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall left for a brief bridal trip, and are now at home at Comanche, Texas, where Mr.
Marshall is employed in the office of the highway department. For travel the bride wore a navy blue sheer frock trimmed with white buttons, white accessories and a corsage of gardenias.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Marshall are graduates of Southwest Texas Teachers College, San Marcos. The past year the bride taught in the high school of Dickinson, Texas.

Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Benny Oefinger of Odem, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Sullivan and daughter, Beverly, and Mrs. Sullivan's mother, Mrs. Oscar Woodley, of Carrizo Springs, Mr. and Mrs. J.
M. Reily and children of Waynesboro, Miss. Mr. and Mrs. J. M.
Marshall, parents of the bridegroom, and his sister, Mrs. McCullough, of Comanche, Miss Yvonne Carson of Rocksprings, and Mrs. Walter Moore of Sabinal.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bendele, and Chester W. Beyer were married
Sunday, June 8, at 3 o'clock p. m.,

Ann Beyer and Peggy Anne Batot.

They were dressed in identical frocks in rainbow colors, fashioned of silk net over taffeta. They wore short veils of net to match their dresses fastened at the top of their heads with a bunch of tiny rosebuds and forget-me-nots. They carried bouquets of rose gladioli. Little Miss Patricia Louise Batot wore a miniature of the bride's costume and carried a basket of sweetheart roses. The ring bearer was little Anthony M. Haass, who carried the rings on a white satin heart showered with white forget-me-nots.

The bride wore a lovely gown fashioned of all-over lace over pure white satin, with a sweetheart neckline, and long sleeves full at the shoulder and extending to a point over the hand. The close fitting bodice was fastened at the back with a row of white satin-covered buttons, and the skirt flared into a long circular train. She wore a crown of tiny pearls with a veil of pure white illusion bordered with lace. She wore a beautiful triple strand of pearls and carried a bou-quet of white calla lilies tied with a white satin bow.

Immediately after the wedding a going-away costume was a rose and white tiny checked sharkskin suit, with white and navy accessories.

QUIHI NOTES

Peaceful surroundings. War worries and horrors only on paper and on the radio. And few bother with reading or listening. No industrial flare-ups and tie-ups and strikes penetrate the calmness. No traffic incidents.
No criminal intrusions. The weather as made to order, where other communities are terrorized with floods and storm and hail. The market prices for livestock as good as a mer. And the crop-prospects are most excellent. How joyful and thankful everybody! How crowded the services where the Giver of all good gifts receives His dues and the hearty acknowledgment for His share in this pleasant situation! True, is it?
Look about and see. Search your own heart!

Another League program came off with fine efforts and splendid cooperation. A fair sized audience took in the occasion and not to their regret. Thanks. Here are the assignments for July: Select readings, Harold Bohlen, Mrs. Andrew Eckhart, Arnold Reitzer; vocal selections, Mr. Alfred Boehle, Mrs. Herbert Moehring, Mr. Roy Bohlen; instrumental number, Miss Hertha Weeber. The church choir never fails in its various presentations, and the lectures, no doubt, give a good deal of healthy food for thought for those who wish to use the upper story. In the business meeting a number of important transactions were resolved upon. The interior of the Parish Hall is to be painted in the near future. A fair contribution was made towards the establishment of Social Centers for boys in the army.
A religious and patriotic duty. Several wear the bronze buttons proudly in memory of the mothers whose sons were drafted. Do you? A picnic is arranged for July 4th, somewhere, somehow, for the Leaguers.
Register your intentions with one of the committee members having charge of the project. They are Mr.
and Mrs. Clarence Bohlen, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Nietenhoefer. Do it early, please. A call meeting is set for next Sunday after the morning service.
Further details will then be presented.

With song and prayer and a pertinent teering for various tasks in congregational life. Mrs. Roy Daily and Mrs. Clarence Daily were welcomed as guests. Among other items a general clean-up of the church building was set for June 18 in the afternoon.

A dozen venetian blinds were purchased for the Parish Hall. The nice luncheon was in charge of Mrs. Harm

THE LOW DOWN FROM HICKORY GROVE

Anybody poppin' off and saying the Germans must be a queer lot to be led around by the nose, are just poppin' off. You don't need to go 4 thousand miles to see sights, you just glance down our own main street.

The latest I see, is where the U. S. A. is fixing to furnish free mobile homes for lemon strikers in sunny California. The Govt.
is helping to keep the strike going there with its left hand, and sweating blood—or claiming to do so—building ships, etc., with the other hand, elsewhere.

I don't know, but it is just a bare chance that this lemon strike the Boys there on the raging Patomac who are furnishing the free mobile homes, do not like lemonade—they might all hail from Kentucky.

But to get back to strikes, I been trying to find out why we keep on trying to run our U. S.
A. labor department from a side-saddle.

Yours with the low down,

JOE SERRA

TAXES IN THE HEADLINES

The problem of taxation today has three sides to it. First, our tax rates must be adequate to produce necessary revenue. Second, the burden must be distributed so as to fall equitably on all classes of taxpayers.
Third, we must not unnecessarily imperil our standard of living and our productive capacity by excessively burdening either industry or the individual.

One criticism of the new tax bill is that it places far too great a burden on the middle-income groups—
those who earn from $5,000 to $15-000 a year. The bill would force these groups to pay for a percentage of government expenditures which is out of all proportion to their size or financial capacity. And, as now proposed, it would not place anything like a commensurate tax load on taxpayers in the lower income groups.

The proposed bill has also been severely criticized for the staggering taxes it would levy against industry.
What this country needs is production—and still more production. Any tax bill which takes too high a percentage of the earnings industry must use for expansion and to attract new investment, will have a deleterious effect on production.

Criticism is increasing because of the refusal of lawmakers and government bureaus to make cuts in non-defense expenditures which would reduce new tax demands. There must be "sacrifices" by tax eaters as well as taxpayers.

The critics of the new tax measures include government experts as well as private citizens. They should be listened to—and Congress should take all the time needed to frame a tax law that is in accord with the emergency of the times.—Industrial News Review.

AT LAST THE LIGHT DAWNS

FARMING has insisted, since Hoover's initial essay at imitating the English system of the dole, that the proper way to help the needy was to put them to work, not raking leaves or building play grounds but producing food from the soil.

A crazier idea was never hatched in a bug-house than the notion that want can be alleviated by taking men out of productive labor or destroying the products of labor after it has been created.

After some ten or more years of such folly, some one at benighted Washington has at last caught a glimmer of light, as witness this admission by a spokesman for the Federal Department of Agriculture:

"By supporting from 6 to 8 million farm people who are not required for commercial production, AGRICULTURE IS CARRYING OUT A LARGE-SCALE RELIEF
PROGRAM at its own expense. It is TAKING CARE OF MORE PEOP-LE THAN ALL OF THE DIRECT RELIEF PROGRAMS IN ALL OF THE 48 STATES COMBINED."

What a "relief" to know that dawn is breaking!

But wait!

Did the man who made that admission get an attentive hearing from the "policy makers" above him?

Or did he get a "kick in the pants" for his disloyalty?

Righteousness is ever on the side that thinks the clearest and acts the wisest, regardless of its numbers!

HONDO, TEXAS, JUNE 13, 1941

Washington Snapshots

by JAMES PRESTON

Behind-the-hand whispers in Washington tell of new plans for a reorganization of the defense setup in an effort to speed the rearmament drive.

The present machinery, as nearly everyone admits is hodgepodge, hit and miss, and particularly unwieldy through a bottleneck—the White House.

For example, OPM cannot decide whether to build new steel plants until the President makes up his mind whether they are needed; Leon Henderson and his price regulators cannot determine whether legislation is needed to strengthen their powers until the President reaches a decision; and so on and on. The President naturally spends a large part of his time worrying over details of that kind. The truth is that William Knudsen is as right now as he was a year ago when he said the only defense bottleneck is "Time." Valuable time is lost while things drip through the White House funnel.

With few exceptions—and businessmen at OPM are among those who agree—there is little argument against a change. But the important thing to some is that apparently those who are in charge of key phases of the program are not being consulted about the new plan.

OPM businessmen have speeded production tremendously since the first new defense machinery was created a year ago. But today they know nothing about the proposed reorganization. As one strongly pro-administration businessman at OPM put it:

"Somebody in an office or a bedroom (Harry Hopkins' office is a White House bedroom) blocks away from here is thinking up a new scheme. As usual, those involved will not hear about it until it is signed on the dotted line and sealed."

OPMers might not be too surprised at that if they had been in Washington longer. For after all, when the present defense machine was created, it was set up with almost complete disregard for an industrial mobilization plan drafted by the War Department after 20 years!

Typical of the way things are going and, in fact, an indication of a complete lack of understanding of what is happening, was a recent press release issued by the Office for Emergency Management (not the Knudsen OPM), which is the holding company for all defense agencies.

This release summarized what has happened in the last year, and included these sentences:

"On March 19, the President set up the National Defense Mediation Board, and its prompt settlement of the 75-day-old Allis Chalmers tie-up and a number of smaller strikes stemmed the tide. Public fears began to subside as industry and labor put their shoulders to the wheel. National defense again forged ahead."

The very day that release was issued, this was the strike picture: Eleven thousand workers in the Pacific Coast airplane industry voted to go on a strike;

Pacific Coast shipyards were closed down by a strike;

Production at the government's own $35,000,000 munitions plant in Ravenna, Ohio, was halted by a strike;

AFL leaders warned that the new shipyard strikes threatened in the Great Lakes area;

And the threat of another disabling strike hung over the coal industry.

That was not an exceptional day. The government's own figures show that the number of disputes has increased since March, and the number of strikes actually adjusted has dropped in the last 20 days.

In February, before the Mediation Board "stemmed the tide" of strikes, the U. S. Conciliation Service assigned its men to 327 strikes. In March, the total was 378, in April 439, and in the first four weeks of May it had risen to 474.

At the same time, the number of disputes adjusted by the Conciliation Service dropped from 102 in April to 98 in May.

That's some "tide stemming!"

—WSS—
Since the time the Wright brothers made their first successful flight, the airplane industry in the United States has built about 60,000 planes of all types. The present defense program, by contrast, calls for the completion of 40,000 planes by the end of the next eighteen months.

—WSS—
All incomes of $10,000 and over, if taken entirely for taxes, would pay all costs of government for only about two months.

—WSS—
The United States, with only 6 per cent of the world's population, has nearly 19,500,000 telephones, or about half of all those in existence.

And a telephone in New York City will reach 92 per cent of all the rest of the phones in the world.

—WSS—
In eleven months' time since the defense program first got under way, American industry's output increased 24 per cent. This is a larger increase in productive output than during any other similar period in our manufacturing history.

—WSS—
"Science can give mankind a better standard of living, better health and a better mental life, if mankind in turn gives science the sympathy and support so essential to its progress," Vannevar Bush, President, Carnegie Institution.

INFORMATION FOR SELECTEES

General J. Watt Page, State Selective Service Director, said today that the number of Selective Service rejections for physical reasons in Texas constitute a challenge to public and private health agencies and also to the public at large.

Referring to a statement of Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, deputy director of Selective Service, that the country's youth, as revealed by Selective Service tests, is something of which "we nationally should be thoroughly ashamed," General Page pointed out that the national condition is reflected to a certain extent in every State, and he emphasized the need for vigorous action by all citizens to improve the general health.

General Page, using the Nation at large as an example, pointed out that out of one million Selective Service registrants who have been given physical examinations, 380,000 have been found unfit for general military service, or considerably more than one-third.

"Looking into the cause of the rejections," General Page said, "we find that nutritional deficiencies are directly or indirectly responsible for one-third of the rejections. This is a condition that is dangerous and it calls for action—concerted action, immediate action, vigorous action."

Of the total number of men rejected in the Nation because of physical disabilities, General Page said, about one-half were unfit for any military service and the remainder placed in Class 1-B, or fit only for limited military service. The men in this group, he continued, present a special problem and every effort should be made to correct the physical defects among them that can be corrected so that they may be able to fulfill their military obligations.

"That means," he added, "that we are confronted with the necessity for rehabilitation in cases where it is possible to better physical condition. And we should strive to find a place in the national defense picture for those with uncorrectable disabilities."

General Page subdivided the correctable group thus: (1) Those who will attempt to correct their disabilities without urging; (2) those who will be content to remain as they are.

He declared he believed the responsibility for rehabilitating those in the last group should be a direct responsibility of the government.

"Disposal of sewage plant sludge by converting it into fertilizer brought the City of El Paso an award from the Texas Health Department. 'The sewage plant sells dried sludge to farmers for fertilizer at 75 cents a cubic yard. Other dried sludge is treated with addition of other fertilizer elements, ground and packed in sacks, which the city sells for $2.25. The sacked fertilizer is used for lawns, shrubs and flowers. The city has a market for practically all the sludge fertilizer it produces, city officials said."

Tax Remission Bill

S. B. No. 5, remits one-half of the ad valorem taxes back to the counties for the purpose of aiding the counties in their financial stresses, was finally passed by the House after a number of amendments had been attached thereto. The Bill has now gone back to the Senate for concurrence in or rejection of the amendments.

Several weeks ago the Attorney General declared this Bill unconstitutional on the ground that no public calamity had occurred to warrant the passage of the Bill. However, a majority of the House members decided to pass the Bill and let the Supreme Court of the State declare it unconstitutional, if it is unconstitutional.

Governor's Veto

Up to the present time the Governor has vetoed 6 bills, signed 144, and filed 79 without his signature. Of the six bills vetoed by the Governor, four were passed over his veto, they being as follows:

H. B. No. 828. Re: San Jacinto River Conservation and Reclamation District;

H. B. No. 286. Re: Protecting seniority rights of employees; and

H. B. No. 875. Re: Amendments to University Compensation Act relative to seasonal workers.

"DANGER AHEAD"—Friday and Saturday, action film in which James Newell turns in another of the Renfrew of the Mounted series. His problem is to unravel the mystery of how a hot car racketeer makes a few bank grabs on the side. Partners in the Renfrew adventure is Dave O'Brien and Dorothea Kent, a blonde who took a course in criminology and can't be combed out of the mounties' hair.

"THE WAGONS ROLL AT NIGHT"—Sunday and Monday, drama filmed against a background of carnival life in which Sylvia Sidney makes a brave fight for the man she loves. The cast includes Humphrey Bogart and Eddie Albert. "WESTERN UNION"—Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, western film with a notable cast composed of Robert Young, Virginia Gilmore, Randolph Scott, Dean Jagger and Slim Summerville. Courage, perseverance and love string the "singing wires" from Omaha to Salt Lake City, through Indian country, in 1862.

WILDLIFE SEEKS "COVER"

Most animals, and many birds, require three different types of "cover" to keep them safe and content, says H. G. Towns, biologist of the Soil Conservation Service. Many of the birds and small animals are distinctly helpful to farmers, and where a farmer wishes to encourage these wild helpers and conserve soil at the same time, he can frequently make plans for improving the cover without interfering with farm operations.

The three types of cover are: (1) of ordinary quality to conceal the normal activities of the birds and animals; (2) denser cover in which they can escape from immediate danger; and (3) special types of cover for nesting or breeding.

Forests, shrubs, tall grasses and crops are examples of the first type. Thickets, tangles of shrubs and vines along fence rows, stone fences, hollow logs, and piles of brush give protective cover, both for escape and for normal travel. Ground nesting birds and many small animals need tall grasses or reeds for nesting. Brown thrashers, cardinals and finches often nest in shrubs, and other birds in trees. Nuthatches, bluebirds, woodpeckers, and titmice nest in holes in dead snags or trees. For each species the suitable type of nesting cover is essential.

Embarrassing

When Acid Indigestion, Gas on Stomach or Heartburn make you feel uncomfortable or embarrass you, try Alka-Seltzer, which contains alkalinizing buffers and so helps counteract the associated Excess Stomach Acidity.

But the relief of these minor stomach upsets is only a small part of what you can expect Alka-Seltzer to do for you. You will find it effective for Pain Relief in Headache, Neuralgia, Colds and Muscular Aches and Pains. It contains an analgesic, (sodium acetyl salicylate), made more prompt and effective in its pain-relieving action by alkaline buffer salts.

When hard work or strenuous exercise make you feel tired and dragged out, enjoy the refreshing effect of a glass of sparkling, tangy Alka-Seltzer.

Unless the wildlife can have the sense of security that the three types of cover afford, they will not remain long in one place, but will move on to where they will be better suited, says Towns.

About three of every four trees planted in Texas shelterbelts under the Prairie States Forestry project during the 1940 season have survived, according to the Forestry Service. The average survival in Texas was computed at 76 percent. Trees and shrubs which continue to show the highest survival in the shelterbelt plantings include green ash, cottonwood, American and Chinese elms, hackberry, black and honey Russian mulberry, desert willow, catalpa, black walnut and cedar.

BIRY

One of the saddest shocks received here was Tuesday morning when word was brought that Johnny Blackburn and three sisters had been in a wreck and lost their lives. We had known them all. They were all killed in a short distance of here. The loved ones have our deepest sympathy. Quite a number from Johnny Blackburn and Mrs. Chas. Goss in San Antonio and Mrs. Wiley Moss and Mrs. John Howard at Devine.

Mr. Frank Bilhartz and son from San Antonio spent the week-end with Ed Bader.

Mr. Frank Biry is working at D'Hanis.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Carl and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Sullivan and son from Beaumont visited with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Carl.

Mr. and Mrs. Matt Bader and son from LaCoste spent Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Bader.

Mr. and Mrs. Barney Moss and son of Alice spent a few days with Mrs. C. L. Wernette with her accompanied by Miss Jonell Wernette.

The Baptist revival began at Black Creek, Friday night, June 6, closes on June 15. Everybody welcome.

YANCEY

A revival meeting at the Methodist church, conducted by Rev. Arch. Wells of Dallas, began Sunday, June 1st. Services will be held at 10:30 A. M. and at 8:00 P. M. Everybody is invited to attend.

Mr. J. D. Burkin of Luling and son, Ray, of San Antonio were here last Sunday.

Albert Wilson of Vandalia, Illinois, came home Monday to spend his vacation with homefolks. He has been absent from home about 12 months, working in the oil business.

Misses Jane and Eileen McClaugherty returned from San Marcos where they went to school.

Mr. H. G. Wilson is enjoying a visit with a relative who left here fifty years ago, a cousin of Mr. Wilson of the same name. Their home is in Arizona, and are also related to Mrs. Philo Crain Sr., of Moore.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Johnson and baby of Santa Rosa are spending vacation time at the home of Mr. Harrison Wilson.

Miss Florine Ward, who was employed at Uvalde the past few months doing N. Y. A. work, has been transferred to San Marcos.

Miss Lillian Wiemers has finished a term teaching at Sanderson and is visiting at home.

Sunday evening we received the sad news that Mrs. Mary Schuehle had passed away suddenly at her home north of Hondo; her husband, August E. Schuehle, preceded her in death several years ago, also dying suddenly. We deeply sympathize with the family. The deceased was a relative of this writer.

The tragic death of the Blackburn family was probably the saddest that ever occurred in this county. The parents of the unfortunate victims came to Medina county in 1880—when the Elder J. E. Burgin and brother, H. N. Burgin, settled near Quibi, subsequently the family grew up near our old home. The deepest sympathy is extended to the bereaved families.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Crain of Pearsall attended services at the revival meeting Sunday evening.

Mrs. H. N. Burgin visited Mrs. B. C. Wiemers and daughter, Agnes, in San Antonio last Sunday. Also stopped off at her brother's, W. N. Saathoff, and family for a little while.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilson motored to San Antonio last Sunday visiting her mother and family.

Miss Anna Lee McAnelly spent last week-end with homefolks and returned to Austin to take a summer course in education.

Mr. Glen Crain, who taught here since Christmas, left for his home in Quitman, Texas, and Mr. Fred Allen, our Voc. Ag. teacher for four years, left for Kingsville where he will be attending classes for sometime.

We received an announcement of the marriage of Miss Katherine Ross of Lubbock to Mr. B. C. Spratt of Hereford, Texas, on May 25, 1941. Mr. Spratt was the first bandmaster in Yancey school.

Mr. Otto Kollar of San Antonio has moved his barbershop to near Mr. Gilson's store.

Rev. and Mrs. Carl Staben and daughter, Betty Lou, of Gentry, Ark., visited here the week-end. They were enroute to their new location at Mission, Texas.

Mr. Robert McGivney of San Antonio spent the week-end with his wife at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Fasel, returning to his post of duty at the army camp Sunday.

A beautiful wedding of the early summer season took place at St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Devine, Texas, on Tuesday morning, June 3, 1941, at nine o'clock, when Miss Lois Beatrice Schott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Schott, became the bride of Jesse L. Goslin, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Goslin. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion with ferns, white gladiolas and snapdragons. Father L. Schiel read the impressive double ring ceremony, which was followed by a nuptial high mass. Mrs. E. A. Bohl played the bridal music and sang the Ave Maria at the Offertory. The groom was attended by Henry Schott Jr. as best man, and Raymond Ehlinger and Joseph Schmidt were groomsmen. Jack Schott, brother of the bride, and Geo. V. Schott, cousin of the bride, served as ushers. The bride's attendants were: Mrs. J. F. Schott, aunt of the bride, who was matron of honor, Miss Virginia Kempf acted as maid of honor, Miss Inez Poerner and Miss Doris Schott, sister of the bride, were bridesmaids. Little Miss Mary Louise Bendele was flower girl.

Arlis Schott, cousin of the bride, was ringbearer. The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a beautiful gown of white satin paneled with lace. The lovely full skirt fell into a long train. The beautiful veil of silk illusion edged with rose point lace was caught to the bride's head with a beautiful coronet of seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of white gladioli, showered with white sequin dots. The matron, maid of honor, and bridesmaid dresses were of mousseline de soie in pastel colors, fashioned along lines similar to the bride's dress. Mrs. Schott wore pink, Miss Kempf was in yellow, Miss Poerner wore orchid and Miss Schott was in blue. They wore short veils of illusion of matching shades, caught to their heads with wreaths of flowers. The little ringbearer was dressed in white. Immediately following the ceremony at the church a reception was held following which dinner was served in the home of the bride's parents to the members of the immediate families and a few friends. For going away the bride wore an ensemble of dusty rose crepe, a rose felt hat and accessories of white. She wore a corsage of carnations of a deeper shade of rose. After a short trip, Mr. and Mrs. Goslin will be at home at Devine, Texas.

GOOD POULTRY TONIC

A tonic is not a cure-all and where certain diseases are present the treatment for that disease should be used. Furthermore, hens that are thrifty and laying well should not be doctored, but for those that are out of condition—droopy, lifeless, or "off feed"—J. E. Ivey, Alabama's extension poultryman, has for many years suggested a simple tonic. Two pounds of mixture given may be obtained through your local drug store for about 70 cents and will treat 100 hens. Use a tablespoonful for each 15 hens, feeding for 3 days, leaving off for 3 days, then repeat for 3 days. The mixture is:

10 ounces magnesium sulphate, 1 ounce magnesium oxide, 2 ounces sulphate of iron, 2 ounces ground ginger, 3 ounces flowers of sulphur, and ½ ounce red pepper.—The Progressive Farmer.

WHY DON'T YOU SEE A DOCTOR?

If your golf game is a few strokes off, you call upon the misses a beat, it goes promptly to the repair shop. Then, why should you limp along on a ration of half-way health? If you aren't up to par, go see your Doctor. And do it NOW.

An office call at this time may save you needless suffering and increased expense later on.

WINS ON FIRESTONES

Driving his teammate's car from 15th place to a spectacular victory in one of the most dramatic races ever held at the historic Indianapolis Speedway, Mauri Rose won his first 500-mile race on May 30th.

Starting the race in the coveted pole position by reason of his highest qualifying speed of 128.691, Rose was well up with the leaders
when his car developed engine trouble after 155 miles and was forced out of the race. Lou Moore, owner of the car which Rose had been driving, asked Rose to relieve Floyd Davis, who was driving another one of Moore's cars and Rose drove to victory at an average speed of 115.117 miles per hour without a tire change or tire trouble of any kind. This was the 22nd consecutive

Romance of Hudson Bay and James Bay in which the luxurious pelt of the silver fox is the lure that tempts men to brave the perils of barren shores, dangerous waters and the maddening silences of long arctic winters. A story of love, patriotism and devotion to duty rendered exceptionally vivid by the author's splendid ability to impart the mystery and charm of the great white places.

Readers are indebted to no current novelist so much as to George Marsh for depicting the reality as well as the romance of that wild region referred to in general terms as the Hudson Bay country. No one has a better knowledge of the great and diversified stretch of country that rises from the shores of the immense bay nor of the rugged, courageous people who live there and the many dangers and thrilling characteristics of their everyday lives. The little tragedies, the big heartaches, the pathos, the deep love, the grim hate and strength of purpose of these dwellers in the great white places have never been more truly or more vividly described than by him.

George Marsh.

In the present story the author does not go quite so far north as in some of his previous tales. Action is confined to the James Bay region, which, while somewhat nearer home, is still sufficiently wild for the purposes of virile romance. The fur trading posts are a little nearer to civilization and more numerous than in the barren reaches of the Far North, but the wilderness characteristics of the country are not essentially less, nor the types of inhabitants and the sort of life they lead much different.

Being the southern extension of Hudson Bay, the body of water denominated as James Bay, has a milder summer but a scarcely less terrifying winter than the other. Its uplands are no less bleak nor its frozen mysteries less intriguing. Winter is the period and an isolated trading post the scene of Mr. Marsh's story.

CHAPTER I

Out where sinister cloud banks fused with gray waters the sullen bay moaned fitfully. Along shore, plover, sandpiper and yellow-legs, godwit and curlew fed behind the retreating tide, while restless flocks of teal and pintail patrolled the flats between the marshes and the sea. Inland, where mice-hunting hawk-owls wheeled and dipped low over the grass flats, black duck rose from a pool as a heavily burdened figure made its way slowly toward a tent on an alder-grown tongue of higher land thrusting seaward into the marsh. As the man neared the camp, a dog barked. Then the warning, rough and sharp, softened to whines and yelps of recognition. Plunging at a stake, a huge alre-dale wriggled an ecstatic welcome to his goose-laden master.

"Hello, Shot, old boy!" With an exclamation of relief the man stretched his arms, for his load had been heavy. He was rangy and well made, his lean, strongly modeled features bronzed by wind and sun. From the corner of the right eye a scar crossed the cheek bone to the ear.

Placing his gun in the tent, the goose-hunter freed the plunging dog. Phone 127

Throughout the long hours of the day a prisoner at his stake, nose tortured by the scent, eyes hungry for the sight of passing duck and geese, the alre-dale went mad at his release.

While the animal worked off his pent energy in thrashing through the alders and long grass in the vicinity of the camp, his master started a fire and put on a kettle of goose to boil; then went in search of drift cedar, for a September norther on the west coast of James bay may blow for days, and cedar kindlings kept dry in a tent are useful.

In an hour the marshes were purple with dusk. Then over the bay an unbroken roar as of a thousand guns, coupled with thrusts of light, signaled the turn of the tide, and the barrage of wind and rain opened. Along the wide beaches thundered the surf. A mile back in the rocking alders, in a low tent anchored and propped against the pounding of the wind, a man lay with his dog.

As Garth Guthrie listened to the clamor of the wind, the far drumbeat of the advancing tide, the drive of the rain like machine-gun bursts on his tent, his thoughts followed the throbbing years through which he had just lived. Here, in this wild night on the gray coast of the bay, how shadowy it seemed—that war which had caught him up, a boy fresh from college, and dropped him a man, scarred of body—disillusioned. Even Ethel seemed shadowy, although her last letter brought up the coast by canoe packet from Fort Albany hardly two weeks before, had flicked him with remorse—regret, almost, for his decision to winter again on the bay—Ethel, whom he had taken by storm (as he thought) at the time of his short leave home, in Montreal, after the tragic Somme.

It had been a typical war wooing. Enlisting as a private, he had gone overseas with the first Canadian division, and returned, late in 1918, a veteran platoon leader, wearing a wound stripe and the Military Cross; for one morning, in his English hospital, Lieut. Garth Guthrie had received a double surprise—a decoration for gallantry and sixty days' home leave while his wounded left arm recovered its strength. This last was patently the work of his older brother, Charles, whose Montreal machine shops were running night and day on government shell contracts, for home leave was rare among the Canadians.

Then he had met Ethel.

With a boy of twenty-four, who, two years before, had carried the dreams of a college senior into the shambles of Flanders, the hours spent with the lovely Ethel Falconer could march to but one fulfillment. A member of the nursing corps organized by Clara Guthrie, Garth's efficient sister-in-law, the girl had captured his imagination at their first meeting. Youth, war, and Mrs. Guthrie had done the rest.

So young Lieutenant Guthrie, wounded and decorated for bravery, and brother of the maker of munitions and member of government boards, had, in those tense, dramatic days, found to his delight that the course of true love often runs surprisingly smooth. In a manner foreign to earlier generations, Ethel Falconer had met the impetuosity of the ardent young soldier with a response equally frank. The days of his leave were too cruelly short to be wasted. In a week she was wearing his ring.

Then came the parting, and the two ghastly years—nightmares of grime and slaughter, soul-harrowing months of alternate hope and despair, followed by—victory! To the man lying in the tent shaken by the storm returned the face of Ethel, vivid as when, on his return from overseas, he stood at the rail of his ship being warped to its pier.

It had been a proud and happy homecoming for Maj. Garth Guthrie, D. S. O., but the three wound stripes on the sleeve of his tunic were no empty symbols. There remained to the man in the tent the clear-cut memory of the moment when his yearning arms had released her and Ethel had gasped, "Oh, Garth, how thin and old you've grown!" Then, as he turned to hug Clara and his brother, the ill-concealed start—the look of pain when Ethel Falconer first saw the red scar furrowing his cheek from eye to ear. His letters had casually mentioned a scratch on the face, for it was gas which had held him weeks in the hospital. Until he met Ethel that morning on the pier he had forgotten—he was disgraced.

So poignant was the memory that the man, stretched on his blankets in the dim candle light instinctively raised his right hand to trace with his fingers the course of the bullet which had seared his face. Then with much grunting a hairy body wriggled its way to a place beside him; the moist nose of a massive, leonine head was thrust into his face, while from a deep throat came low noises.

"Etienne is surely making a wet night of it in the bush, Shot," said the man, as the wind drove the rain in bursts against the straining fly of the tent. Then with the hairy bulk of the contented dog sprawled against the length of his recumbent body, head propped on one hand while the other rubbed the alre-dale's ears, Guthrie's thoughts were again with his homecoming, two years before.

The tense days following his landing marched past his dreaming eyes in a pageant of camp life and military duties preceding the discharge of his battery; swift hours with Ethel, dinners with his family, reunions with old friends. Again he rode through cheering thousands in the final review of his brigade.

He chuckled at the memory of Shot, marching with battalion headquarters in full field kit and wearing a blanket with its wound stripes.

At the time of his discharge the surgeons had shaken their heads over his lungs. "You're not out of the woods yet," he had been told. "A long rest in the open air, or you'll have trouble with that chest." But a desk in the office of Charles Guthrie waited him and he had kept his own counsel.

"You've lost five years, old man," his materialist brother had deprecated. "You're twenty-six and have a lot to learn."

Hot blood had darkened Garth's face. "Lost five years? Where would you and your money be if millions of us hadn't lost five years?" he blurted.

"Oh, you know I appreciate all that, old chap," soothed the smug Charles. "It's unnecessary for me to repeat how proud I am of your record but you know nothing about the business as yet; and I want to see you in a position to marry."

True, Garth had acknowledged, he knew nothing of the Guthrie Steel company, which, created and developed by the energy and ability of Charles Guthrie, had, through war contracts, made his brother a millionaire. And then there was Ethel, waiting. So, instead of the summer in the open air on which the doctors had insisted, he had gone to work.

The fingers of the man lying in the tent shut convulsively on the thick mane of his dog as he remembered the pain which thrust through him when he had first realized that Ethel never voluntarily walked or sat on his right side. Coming from a world of broken men, where the blind and the maimed were commonplaces, he had almost forgotten the shock the scar on his cheek had given her the day of his homecoming. Unpleasant though it might be, this red gash, to look upon, it was nevertheless the symbol of his service, the measure of his manhood. Yet to the girl who loved him, it seemed a thing of aversion—repulsive. Following the discovery, he had, on meeting her ironically covered the cleatix with his hand, or turned his head, but the red shame and the passionate tears of protest, which it invariably induced, checked him.

That Ethel Falconer was not of the fiber of many of the women he knew, who patently cherished the scars of their men—gloried, seemingly, in these proofs of their sacrifice for Canada and the empire, had forced itself upon the consciousness of Guthrie with a bitterness with which his philosophy vainly contended. Vehement as were her protests, her denials, when, in a moment of depression and disillusion, he had suggested that to hold her to a promise made in 1916 to a man whose face was presentable and body sound, was grossly unfair, now that he had returned to her the stotsum of war, scarred, changed, he nevertheless knew that Ethel, too, was having her bad half hours. But notwithstanding his moment of doubt, his gray moods, due as much to physical condition as unhappiness, Garth Guthrie had valiantly clung to the dreams of the fair girl he had taken back overseas with him after the golden fortnight in 1916.

Then, after six months in the office and foundry of Charles Guthrie, the lungs of the returned soldier had developed a condition which medical authorities diagnosed as alarming. A certain sanatorium in the foothills of the Laurentians was the imperative order, and the wedding in the spring, for which Ethel and Clara Guthrie had so meticulously planned, was indefinitely postponed.

With his dog, trained as a puppy behind the lines in 1918, Guthrie left Montreal to make the fight for lost health—and happiness. And before the snows left the Quebec hills and the spruces dripped in April thaws, he was well on the road to the first. Six months in the Laurentians had healed the lung lesions and put back the hard weight he had lost, but it was under strict parole that the Garth Guthrie of old, burned to a deep tan by the sun-gleam from the March crust, one day walked in on Ethel and his sister-in-law. That night at dinner, through the course of which the practical Charles dwelt at length on his plans for his brother's apprenticeship in a special branch of the growing business, the sober eyes of Garth lit with frank amusement—the hint of a smile repeatedly lifted the corners of his mouth. At length the older brother abruptly demanded:

"You don't seem to be taking me seriously, Garth?"

"My dear Charlie," the man on parole rejoined, "I most certainly am deeply grateful for this interest in my future—these plans of yours; but I have put off telling you something—"

He paused, avoiding the startled look of Ethel, as he continued: "The big man at the hospital talked like a father to me this morning before I left. He said, 'deliberately continued Garth, "that it was a year in the open air for me, or . . . well, he wouldn't give much for my chances."

"Oh, Garth!" Slowly the blond head of the girl drooped to his shoulder, as the pained eyes of Clara met her husband's shocked look.

"My poor boy! You—you mean he actually ordered you away—for a year?" stammered the incredulous Charles.

Garth's arm shepherded the quivering shoulders of the girl, as he nodded to his brother over her golden head. "But you look so fit—so rugged, Garth," protested Clara. "You've recovered all your weight. I don't understand."

"And the wedding?" Ethel's questioning eyes lifted to his.

"Poor dear! I wouldn't have the heart to take you up there. It would be unthinkable." He gravely shook his head.

"Up where?" She turned on him—fear in her eyes. "You can live out of doors here?"

"I can't lose here—I must do something. And a friend has offered me the chance of air—and work, too. Up on James bay. I've been offered a job with the Hudson's Bay company."

Had Guthrie's announced destination been China, the shock could not have been more profound to his hearers. The plump face of his brother darkened in a scowl of frank disapproval. Clara sat open-mouthed, incredulous. Ethel probed Garth's level eyes, as if in doubt of his meaning—then, chin in hands, stared dully at the tablecloth.

"You bound yourself," she said at length, in a voice empty of emotion. "You planned all this—to go away for a year—without consulting me—I don't seem to count, then." Rising stiffly, she had left the room, followed by the sympathetic Clara.

Yes, it had been brutally abrupt—unfeeling, admitted the man lying by his sleeping dog, as the storm drove past the tent in the alders. But the alternative would have been endless letters of protest, reproach, so he had not written. Through the slow months of the winter, with their loneliness and introspection, he had learned to doubt both himself and Ethel. Often in the intervals between her visits with Clara—Charles had been too busy to appear more than once—Garth had desperately tried to analyze the nature of her affection; often, in his doubt of her, fought to free himself from the magic of her hold over him; always, in the end, to realize how he was missing her—how hungrily he waited for her coming. No, the separation had not broken the spell or lessened his need of her, but it had touched his enamored eyes with vision. There in the white hills of his banishment, beyond the glamor of her physical loveliness, he had learned to see how utterly she had failed him. Hurt in body, disillusioned, he had returned from the holocaust of Flanders to the refuge of her arms—the solace of her love—to find regret—a veiled shrinking from the change in him; to learn that she still clung to her memories of the boy with unmarred face who had carried away her heart into the maelstrom of the final years of the war.

He pictured the scene at the Victoria station. Old comrades—fellow officers, there with their Godspeed, chatting in a group, nearby, while he talked with family.

"To think that I can hear from you so seldom—that is what makes it so hard," Ethel was saying.

With a thrust of the old pain he remembered that the girl whose face bore the unmistakable marks of suffering even at parting, had, from habit, stood on his left side. A year had failed to reconcile her. The furrowed cheek was still a thing hideous.

"It is tough. There's only the Christmas mail and a summer packet up the coast from Albany," he had replied, "but there's always the chance of a canoe or dog-team being sent through between times. So write regularly and I'll get them in time. In France I'd often get five or six at once—and read them in their order."

"Oh, you mustn't expect the letters I used to write, Garth," she had swiftly replied.

"No," he said grimly, "I've learned not to expect that."

"You know why."

"Yes, I think I know why." They stood, avoiding each other's eyes, in their unvoiced misery.

The train was about to start. A wave to his friends; a grip of the hand for Charles; a hug for the teary Clara; and he turned to the dry-eyed girl. "Good-by, dear. A year is not so long." He took her in his arms and kissed her. But the face he touched was cold. Her arms hung stiff at her side. "Good-by, Ethel," he repeated. "I'm sorry."

"Good-by, Garth," she faltered. "This, I suppose, is the end—I've lost you."

Down the Mississinibi to Moose, up the coast to Fort Albany, the man who had gone into the north to find health and the solution of his problem in separation, was accompanied by doubt and self-censure. It had been unfair—brutal—this wrenching himself from the sure appeal of her personal charm. But in fairness to the future, it was imperative. A year would clarify his vision—prove her hold over him unbearable or make him a free man. However, notwithstanding the bitterness of her farewell, the first mail to reach him in the early months of his apprenticeship in the fur trade had brought letters patently not those of renunciation. On the contrary they dwelt in detail on plans for his future homecoming and the wedding; were gay with gossip; related with frank pride the rumor of a knighthood for services to the government during the war with which the name of Charles Guthrie was being coupled; at times, to his surprise, approached the warmth of the old days.

In the autumn Garth had been sent north with Etienne Savanne, a veteran servant of the company, to winter at the fur post at the mouth of the Elkwan. When the Christmas mail from Albany was sighted on the white river trail, the mingled feelings with which Guthrie watched the approach of the dog-team bringing word from home—self-analysis through the months to follow. In July when he sailed into Fort Albany in his York boat with his fur packs, his year on the silent west coast was up. The mail he found waiting his arrival brought the news Guthrie; announced the decision of Ethel and Clara for an August wedding on the return of the exile; dwelt at length on the rise in Guthrie's steel; and disposed of his health in the restored by the year in the open.

The last had drawn a bitter smile from the man who read. Pages for the personal affairs of the writers, and a line for the lungs he had brought back from the Hun drive for the Channel ports. So they were waiting in Montreal, were they, for his return, to bend him to their petty ways—shape him into a business machine, like Charlie—when he had breathed the stinging air off the ice-fields of the bay; seen the caribou drift across nameless lakes at dawn; camped under a canopy of stars while the aurora blazoned the north; awakened to the raucous chorus of the Canadas and watched the "waves" rally their legions in the autumn? How blurred, after this, the once poignant memory of Ethel Falconer was growing! How petty seemed the obsession of Charles Guthrie for money and power to the man who had found in the peace of the west coast an oplate for his doubt and disillusion!

With no attempt at defense of his decision to remain for another year, Guthrie wrote home, and without regret, had sailed out of the delta of the great Albany with Etienne, bound for Elkwan.

The man who had lain beside his sleeping dog with his thoughts while the wind roared through the alders, hammering the anchored tent, and the rain beat its intermittent tattoo, sat up, and placing the candle lantern at his elbow, drew a letter from his pocket and read:

"Dearest Garth:

"I don't know what to say—I'm simply stunned. Either you are still ill—are deceiving us, or take this method to humiliate me before your family and the world in the hope that I shall voluntarily give you up. Of course, if you no longer love me, there is nothing to be said. Do you love me still, Garth dear? So long as you do, I shall wait."

"Devotedly—until you wish it otherwise."

ETHEL.

This had been her answer to the burning of his bridges—utter abandonment of her pride, and he had once thought her proud.

Nevertheless, each new reading of the letter brought to Elkwan by the fall packet a fortnight before, had quickened the memory of what this girl, vibrant with life and physical charm, had meant to him—this girl whom he had humiliated. Often, standing before her vivid likeness in his quarters he had gazed at the alluring face, the faultless modeling of neck and shoulders, and marveled at the spell which held him in the north while such loveliness waited his return. She still had power to stir him, but his moods of self-censure and remorse were short-lived. The north had won.

CHAPTER II

At daylight the challenge of the alre-dale waked the sleeping man. With hair erect on mane and back, the dog squeezed through the lashed tent flap to break into furious barking.

"Start up, Shot! Etienne's dropped in for breakfast," called Guthrie.

Presently, weighted down with his load of wet geese, a bent figure pushed through the alders accompanied by the leaping alre-dale.

"Good morning, Etienne! You had a bad night of it in the bush."

The wiry half-breed cackled his load on the platform above his head, and grinned. "I mak good camp een de spruce wid beeg fire, an' roast some goose."

With difficulty the men boiled their tea and a kettle of goose; then, to avoid the flying sand, went into the tent to eat.

"We ought to be starting for Elkwan, Etienne. I don't like to leave her too long, sick as she is."

The swart face of Etienne Savanne grew grave as he nodded.

"She nevalre see de snow once more."

"That's why I hate to leave her alone with old Anne. I'd never forgive myself if—"

Guthrie paused to stare at the tent wall.

The black eyes of his companion softened. "You ben good man, m'sieu. Dat girl die long ago een de bush."

"Yes, the condensed milk has kept her alive—but she should have gone to the mission at Albany."

The other shook his head; then struck a match and lit his pipe before replying.

"You are new man in dees coun-tree. You don't know Injun squaw. At Albanee—without you—she not be happy."

Guthrie reddened under his deep tan. He knew only too well. "But they would have taken better care of her," he protested.

Etienne slowly shook his head. "Too late, m'sieu. She live more long here dan at Albanee."

All day while the norther flayed the west coast, Guthrie and Etienne dressed and salted geese. Deep in the winter, when the earlbou had drifted back from the coast, the geese, freed from the salt by boiling, would be a welcome change from the fat bacon of the company's stores. The wind held into the night, but when the men turned out of their blankets at sunrise the blow was over.

At noon the goose hunters launched the canoe and driving her through a quarter sea, pushed down the coast for the shelter of Altimet Island. They were rounding the low headland of Elkwan point when Gerth, lying in the bow, was aroused by an exclamation from the stern man.

"Look! A boat!" Etienne pointed his dripping paddle across the yellow strait to the shore of the island.

"Shipwrecked—somewhere! Dey use de oar."

In the distance, crossing to the mainland, Guthrie made out a boat. "Dey wave to us!" cried Etienne.

"Dey see de canoe!"

From the craft, still miles away, showed a flutter of white.

"We'll come up with them on the lee side of the point," and Guthrie, whose thoughts were at Elkwan, whose arms were driven by fear—fear that in his absence tragedy had had its grim way, lunged viciously with his paddle.

In the quiet waters beyond Elkwan point, the two boats approached with halting distance. In the ship's dory four men were rowing, while two figures sat in the stern. The crew of the boat rested on their oars.

"Hello, canoe!"

Guthrie answered the hail, and shortly the Peterboro came up with the larger craft. "You've lost your ship?" he began.

The black-bearded figure in the stern of the boat, ignoring the question, demanded: "You're Hudson's Bay people?"

"Yes, we're bound to the Elkwan just below here. You've lost your ship? Where did you leave her?"

Guthrie's curious glance shifted from the bearded spokesman to the girl at his side wearing a pea-jacket and a sou'wester, below the brim of which fluttered a plume of dark hair. As the boats swung together, the air-dale, mane and tale stiff, growled menacingly at the strangers, but a low command from his master silenced him.

"Our schooner's ashore on the outside of the island. We left Port George day before yesterday, and were off Cape Jones when the blow struck us. It crippled our rudder and drove us straight across the bay. We couldn't head into it."

"You were lucky to get ashore in that blow," said the surprised Guthrie. "Your boat must have got a pounding on those flats."

"It did, but we struck at high tide and managed to get most of our stuff off her. Then, this morning, we fell into the hands of a pirate."

"Pirate?" Guthrie exclaimed.

"Oh, Archie," protested the girl, "that's hardly fair. He paid for what he took, and helped with the last of the stores."

"Who were they—where from?"

"They were in a little sixty-foot power schooner, the Ghost St. Johns, and the leader was a red-headed ruffian with a mottled face—horrible!"

The black eyes of Etienne Savanne snapped as they met the backward glance of his chief. "McDonald, Ha! Ha!" said the half-breed with a grin that mapped his swart face with lines.

"What?"

"Yes," nodded Guthrie. "Your pirate was undoubtedly the famous Laughing McDonald. The Indians call him 'McDonald Ha! Ha!' because of the grin—from that scar."

As he spoke, Guthrie was aware that the grave eyes of the girl were curiously studying him—the second man with a scarred face she had met since her shipwreck on the west coast. Instinctively he got the impression that those sober eyes had themselves looked on suffering—tragedy. The blood rose to his forehead as he went on: "They think he's sort of a super-man—the Indians. He's hypnotized them; but," and he met the girl's straight look, "you say he treated you fairly?"

"I think he did," she said, and as she tucked the loose lock of chestnut under her cap, while the color showed faintly at her temples, he wondered if she had read his thoughts.

"Treated us fairly," exploded the bearded man. "Well, I call that—"

"How many men were with him?" roughly interrupted Guthrie.

"Four. There was an Eskimo, too."

"One a big, bearded chap?"

"Yes! The others I took to be sailors."

Guthrie nodded to Savanne. "That's the Newfoundland whaler who brought him into the bay last year," he said; then continued to the stranger. "You had the honor, sir, to meet the man who has stampeded the fur trade from Whale river to Fort Churchill. He took fifty thousand dollars' worth of fox out of the bay last year."

"Hum! Why didn't you drive him out—arrest him?"

Guthrie laughed. "Arrest him for what? He has as much right here as we. Then, you know, there are not many who would relish the job."

"Relish the job! Bah! I thought you fur men were—"

The speaker was interrupted by a voice suddenly grown hard with impatience. "It's getting late. My name is Guthrie—this is my assistant Etienne Savanne. You'd better stop that mast. You'll need the sail or you won't make Elkwan before dark."

"I'm Dr. Archibald Quarrier, sir, geologist. We've been prospecting for iron and copper on the east coast," snapped the other, visibly annoyed.

"This is my sister Miss Joan Quarrier. How far did you say we were from Albany?"

Guthrie smiled into the amused eyes of the girl, who seemed to enjoy the discomfiture of her brother.

Every Electrified Farm Home Can Afford a Modern Kitchen

With an electric kitchen, you can have a month's "vacation" every year.

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

NEW or old, the farm home that has high-line electric service easily can and should have as modern a kitchen as any found in the most up-to-date city residence. As a matter of fact, a convenient kitchen with all the many electrical servants is even more desirable on the farm where many mouths are the rule rather than the exception.

In addition to providing physical relief and comfort, a modern all-electric kitchen also saves time for other duties and actually reduces meal costs in many ways. Thus, an automatic electric pressure water system eliminates countless trips to well or spring for water with which to prepare and cook food and wash dishes. An electric heater provides ample hot water at the turn of a faucet instead of by dipping from a hot well or pans on a stove. Expressed in terms of time, those two devices alone will save the farm wife a minimum equivalent of 30 eight-hour days a year.

Washing tableware—six tons of it each year in the typical home—is one of the most unwelcome tri-daily tasks on the farm. The installation of an electric dishwasher will eliminate at least another month of eight-hour days from kitchen duties on the farm and, in addition, will make all tableware spotlessly clean without touching the hands to dishwasher or towel. An electric refrigerator not only saves many weary steps to cold cellar or spring house but also protects the family health and reduces food waste to a minimum. An electric range has many advantages over other means of cooking, among them cleanliness, coolness, safety and economy.

Small electrical appliances of many kinds, together with a modern sink and sufficient wall and base cabinets for storage, can make kitchen work easier, more convenient and save another month of eight-hour days in the kitchen each year.

The ideal solution to the kitchen problem in any farm home is to install what is commonly known as a "unit electric kitchen"—a combination of electric range, refrigerator, water heater, sink, dishwasher and cabinets—at one time. You can obtain a detailed plan for such a kitchen in your home by sending a rough dimensional sketch of your present kitchen to any one of several manufacturers of major electrical appliances or to certain of the leading farm magazines.

The cost of installing a modern kitchen can be financed on convenient monthly payments directly through the manufacturers, your REA co-operative or the Electric Home and Farm Authority. Or, if you do not care for deferred payments and cannot afford to pay cash for a complete unit kitchen at once, you can install it piece by piece as your income permits. However you finance it, you will find that it pays real dividends in time, work and money.

Of Labor SPEAKS!
Through Its Secretary, Harry W. Acreman

Anti-Strike Legislation

It is reported that Andrew Jackson, called upon to offer a prayer before an assemblage, made the following petition:

"Our Father, we can take care of our enemies—but save us from our damn fool friends!"

Dr. Samuel Johnson aptly remarked:

"Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel!"

In time the people of Texas will discover they have been grossly imposed upon by the enactment of the so-called "anti-strike" legislation. Up to the time of passage of this assinine but vicious law, Texas was looked upon as the leader in labor cooperation in the national defense program. Instead of contributing to our good reputation in such matters, we are now hailed throughout the country as just a labor baiting commonwealth.

This is not the hue and cry of national leaders of labor, but of the country's top men in industry and finance and management. William S. Knudsen before a Congressional committee recently summed up such action viz:

"You cannot make criminals of strikers!"

Frederick W. Bliss, of General Electric sales staff, chairman of the committee on industrial relations of the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce protests:

"Repressive legislation of this character is as out of date as wooden battleships. Any community which seeks to base a program of industrial development upon its reputation as a labor-baiter not only harms itself and labor but also invites all industries within its borders to share a highly troublesome and precarious future."

He was discussing the Texas anti-strike act.

People of Massachusetts should understand such things, since one of the first strikes in America—the Boston Tea Party—was staged in that commonwealth, the year 1773, and according to our school histories violence was involved.

After all, a "strike" is a protest action against abuses of power. The Texas anti-strike legislation is comparative with the edicts of the reign of George III toward the American colonists, so the best people in Boston evidently still resent such repressive measures.

Texas labor chooses the American way to get rid of such obnoxious legislation—through the courts—it could well be titled the case of "the People vs. the Patrioteers."

All committees for the 4th of July celebration will hold a very important meeting in the Fous Bldg. on June 25th at 8:20 o'clock at night. If you belong to a committee, please be present for that meeting.

"Come thou with us and we will do thee good."

The church with a welcome.

A. H. FALKENBERG, Pastor.

LADIES' AID MEETS

The Ladies' Aid Society of Martha met in the Fous Building on May 28, at 2 p. m.

The meeting was conducted in its regular manner. The following committees were appointed: Sick Committee, Mrs. Henry Reus and Miss Emma Fous; Membership Committee, Mrs. George Etter and Mrs. Paul Koenig. Again the members express their wishes of speedy recovery to those who are ill.

Various interesting and important points have been discussed and passed. One of them is to buy a green cover for the altar to be used during this church season.

By now everyone should have received his duty to help make the 4th of July celebration a great success. Should anyone have been overlooked, please notify the pastor or the church Board of Trustees. Your help will be appreciated.

It was kind of Mrs. Wm. Tschirhart and Mrs. Hilda Franger to offer their help to serve the lunch for the hostess, Miss Emma Fous. Everyone enjoyed this delicious lunch.

ORDAINED TO PRIESTHOOD

To Celebrate First Mass at Castroville Sunday, June 22nd.

Reverend Gerald F. Boehme, son of Ferdinand and Adela Boehme of Medina Lake, was ordained to the Holy Priesthood in San Fernando Cathedral, San Antonio, on June 12th, and will celebrate his First Solemn High Mass in St. Louis Church, Castroville, on Sunday, June 22nd.

Father Boehme is a native of Castroville and received two years of his elementary education in the parochial school there. He is a graduate of Main Avenue High School (now Thomas Jefferson) of San Antonio.

After graduation from high school he became associated with the Alamo Life Insurance Company as assistant bookkeeper and cashier, with which occupation he was employed two years. After another year of travels he entered St. John's Seminary to pursue his studies for the Priesthood. He has completed eight years of study in the seminary.

While in the seminary he organized a system of religious correspondence courses which is now being conducted by the seminaries and which has proved so popular with Catholics and non-Catholics alike.

Father Boehme is the first native of the century-old town of Castroville to be raised to the dignity of the Priesthood. He is the second member of that parish to be ordained. Rev. L. J. FitzSimon was the first to have that distinction in 1921.

Sister Mary Rose, a great-aunt of Father Boehme, is a member of the Congregation of Divine Providence Sisters.

All friends and relatives are invited to attend the First Mass at Castroville on June 22nd, and all will be guests of the parish for dinner.

Rev. L. J. FitzSimon, Chancellor of the Archdiocese, will deliver the sermon for the occasion.

NOTICE TO WHEAT GROWERS

Wheat quotas are now in effect and will apply on the 1941 wheat crop. V. P. King, chairman of the Medina County AAA committee announced this week.

Mr. King also announced that preliminary unofficial figures from the State AAA office indicate that Texas farmers approved quotas by a vote of 13,974 to 938, or 93.7 per cent, while the United States voted 80.3 per cent for quotas.

"All farmers who have planted within their wheat allotments for this year," King said, "may continue to sell or feed all they produce. They may also dispose of any old wheat carried over from previous years."

Since quotas are approved, wheat farmers who have planted within their allotments are eligible for a wheat loan which will approximate 94 cents per bushel net in most Texas counties for No. 2 wheat, although the rates have not been announced officially. The amount of excess wheat will be the smaller of actual production or normal yield on the overplanted acres for the farm, the committeeman said.

Overplanted wheat farmers, King continued, who have a marketing excess may dispose of it in one of three ways, (1) they may market it and pay the penalty, which will be 50 per cent of the national average loan rate of 98c per bushel, (2) they may deliver it to the Secretary of Agriculture through the local AAA committee for relief purposes or other purposes that will divert it from the normal channels of trade, or (3) they may store it under bond, in which case the wheat is sealed in storage approved for government loans and the farmer will be eligible for a loan on it at 50 percent of the regular loan rate.

A large number of Hondo people drove over to San Antonio Sunday afternoon for the recital given at 3:30 p. m. by Misses Evelyn and Margaret Ann Knopp, daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Thos. B. Knopp of Hondo. The two young artists are students of the music department of Our Lady of the Lake College and the recital was presented in the college auditorium.

The stage was beautifully decorated with floor baskets of pink gladioluses, and the performers themselves wore white frocks with corsages of roses. A varied program of piano and violin selections was presented, with Miss Evelyn Knopp accompanist for her sister.

WHAT I HEAR AND SEE

By Ernie Thorp
Roaming Reporter for the Anvil Herald

GALVESTON, Texas, May 26.—Well, folks, I'm back with you again after nearly a year, in which time I spent partly doing nothing and trying out several specialty selling lines which still take part of my time.

Right now, I can't make up my mind what to do this summer. I have several very good opportunities to either make real good foldin' money 'er stay broke, the way I am now. But no matter what I do I'll find time to write a column each week for the readers of the Herald, because many of them told me on my last visit to Medina County that they enjoyed reading my goofy stories and I'll mail 'em to Mr. Davis if the stamp money holds out.

The married lady I was traveling with last summer all over the central and eastern States, wants me to travel, you know, just go any damned place, don't make no difference where, just so it ain't in a hot place like The Needles, Yuma, Brawley, Death Valley, 'er Hondo, she don't wanta pay much, fact is nothin, mebbe I'd be losin', then again mebbe I'd be missin' somethin' if I didn't go, damif I know what to do. So it was hot as ole billeyhell this morn' in' on Yale street in Houston and that lady says to me "let's go to Galveston, get a cottage on the Gulf, stay the whole popeyed weekend and catch some breeze." She even offered to buy the gas and pay the rent. Thinkin' there must surely be something bad a'lin' her, I asked her to repeat what she said, and she said she'd buy part of the gas, so I don't budge, then she said she would buy all the gas, still I don't budge, then she uses her handkerchief on her eyes and adds half the cottage rent, still I don't budge 'er even look happy, then she sobs and adds the other half of the rent, I'm still holdin' out for three squares a day, little expenses and some beer money, but it wern't no use. So I came along anyway.

So here we are, very comfortable in a dandy apartment overlooking the sea-wall, enjoying the cool breeze off the Gulf, listening to the moans of the breakers and watching the bathing beauties, they're thickern tadpoles in Medina Lake, and they got some mighty brief styles this season, they shouldn't oughta cost much.

We ain't seen none of Hitler's battleships 'er bombers since Mr. Roosevelt made his speech to the world Tuesday night, but we could hear ole John Bull laugh plum over here in Galveston.

This is all I am going to write for an opener-upper of my column. If you would like to read it every week, drop a card to Mr. Davis, or call him up. My permanent address is 532 Yale Street, Houston, Texas, and I will appreciate a letter or card at any time.

LOCAL BOY makes good

It happens regularly in the telephone company. Some boy who grew up in your neighborhood moves into a superintendent's or other executive's chair somewhere in the Bell System.

His big asset is his experience... his "know how" ... often gained right in your home town.

Because Bell department heads and operating chiefs among them have that "know how," they tackle today's telephone emergency, or tomorrow's telephone growth, with a direct knowledge of your town and your problems. They play a big part in our effort to give you good neighborhood service at rates that almost everyone can afford—and good nation-wide service as you need it.
